EUROPE WILL RESIST KAISER.

FIRM STAND AGAINST HIS PRE-TENSIONS IN MOROCCO.

Meeting of King Edward and President Loubet Te-day May Give Him Warning Reported Now That He'll Help Russia by Letting Fleet Use Carolines as Base.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. LONDON, April 29 .- Europe has had a fit of the blues this week based on causes iescribed in these despatches last Saturday. The fear that Germany has adopted an adventurous policy which cannot fail to endanger European peace spread from diplomatic to other circles and general uneasiness followed.

This was strikingly shown in all the markets. Sharp declines occurred in all government and other gilt edged securities on the London and Continental bourses and depression has been universal.

The Kaiser's Moroccan adventure was serious enough, but nobody knows what lies beyond in his general program. His ultimate idea regarding Morocco obviously is to partition the country, which the Germans believe is far more fertile than Algeria, between Germany, France and Spain, the Atlantic seaboard falling as Germany's share.

It is assumed that Russia cannot oppose the scheme and Great Britain would shrink from the task. The latter assumption, it may be said without hesitation, is baseless. The British temper at the present moment s hotter against Germany than is the French, and the latter is fast approaching the danger point.

The vigorous action of Great Britain and Spain in sending envoys to Fez to offset he German expedition is sufficient indication of the close cooperation with which three signatories to the Morocco agreement will resist German pretensions. morrow's meeting of King Edward and President Loubet will produce another significant warning to Emperor William of the consequences of further attempts to interfere.

The most encouraging development of the week is the effect of M. Delcasse's rehabilitation. His position in France has been immensely strengthened and is now impregnable. There is no doubt that Germany plotted the downfall and the attempt had a result the reverse of what was expected. It is now reported in certain official quarters that the Kaiser has undertaken another move which may have serious consequences. It is nothing less than offering Russia facilities for refitting Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet and a virtual base of operation in the Carolines. The latest reports that the ships of the Baltic fleet are going to the Pacific, whence they will seize an opportunity to reach Vladivostok partially confirms this theory. The Carolines, up to a few days ago, were without cable connection and are far from all ocean routes. In fact they are quite outside the world. The Russians could remain a long time, if the cable were cut, before their presence would be known outside. Even if Japan protested Germany could consume many days in forwarding instructions to move on. But it is the Kaiser's general attitude of menace which disquiets Europe. His protestations for peace, as previously indicated in this correspondence, no longer carry conviction. It is the German Emperor and not the Russo-Japanese war that is upsetting markets, alarming Chancelleries and disturbing public confidence throughout Europe. It has been intimated many times in the past few months that the trend of Japanese inclination after the present war would be soward an alliance with Russia. There naterial arguments to suppor this theory, and it has been much discussed by European publicists. This suggestion has been set at rest by an interesting letter from the Tokio correspondent of The Pimes. He says: *To ally herself with Russia Japan would have to abandon every principle she has hitherto-proclaimed as a rule of her international conduct. She would have to become the partner in the disruption of China and Corea instead of the protector of their integrity. "She would have to join in reserving the markets of the East exclusively to herself and her ally instead of opening them to the nations of the world. She would have to turn her back upon the Anglo-Saxon ideals hitherto so ardently espoused by her people and join hands with a nation which has not yet emerged from the shadow of medieval systems and despotic institutions. Those who know Japan bestfind it difficult to imagine her making such a selection.

A second impediment to a Russo-Jap-"A second impediment to a Russo-Jap-anese alliance is one of sentiment. It is best expressed in an article just published in the Kokumin Shinbun, a journal in close touch with official circles which says: "The statement that the two countries

'The statement that the two countries have learned each other's strength is true in the sense that whereas, Russia at the outset entertained supreme contempt for the Japanese, repeated battles and continuous defeats have altered her estimate of their qualities. While we assuredly do not despise Russia's martial prowess, nor ever despised it, there may be some justice in affirming that practical experience in the field has taught us a large respect for the enemy as a belligerent, but it has taught us something more.

"It has taught us that Russia sets civilization at naught, that she tramples humanity that she transgresses the law that there is no injustice, no violence which she is not prepared to commit nor any oppression, any cruelty she shrinks from perpetrating, that her proudly arro-gated titles of "enlightened state," and "Christian country" are mere empty sem-

'Allies must have common sentiments a common policy and common interests. Russia's disposition is aggressive, her policy is the closed door and her interests lie in monopoly. With our country it is pr cisely the opposite. Japan may conquer, but he will not aggress. Russia may be defeated but she will not abandon her agg: ssi n. With such a country an alliance is beyond the conception even of a dream."

His successor in the barony is Ernest William Becket his nephew, who has been a Member of Parliament for twenty years a Member of rarliament for twenty years and who married in 1883 Lucy Tracy Lee of New York. GREAT OVATION TO IRVING.

Remarkable Bemonstruis, n on Sir Henry's Reappearance in London in "Becket."

Special Cable Despaich to THE SUN LONDON, April 29 .- The reception to Sir Henry Irving to-night at the Drury Lane Theater, where he appeared for the first time since his recent illness in a revival of Becket," was probably the most remarkable demonstration in the history of English

When the curtain was raised and Sir Henry was disclosed sitting at the chess table the audience rose en masse and cheered for fully five minutes. The ovation was renewed in each entr'acte and at the finale the distinguished actor was called before the curtain several times amid a continuous storm of cheers, the men waving their hats and programs and the women handkerchiefs.

Finally in response to incessant demand for a speech Sir Henry declared that words were impossible to express his thoughts and thanks. His blood was surging through his veins while he was speaking them.

Maud Fealy's acting as Rosamend was greeted with enthusiastic approval. So great was the popular desire to see Irving that a crowd, mostly of women, began to collect at the pit door as early as 8 o'clock this morning.

CORELLI SCORES SOCIETY.

Attacks "the Overrich Pools" Who Waste Money on Food and Dress.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN LONDON, April 29 .- Following the example of the Bishop of London and other prominent persons Marie Corelli is out in an expression of her views on the simple life. She attacks chiefly what she calls "the overrich fools" who spend what would be an ordinary man's small fortune on one evening's entertainment.

After referring in scathing terms to the wanton waste of money in mere feeding at expensive luncheons and dinners given daily and nightly at fashionable restaurants in the West End, Miss Corelli answers a critic who asked where the smart set which she and others described could be found by declaring it to be "at public eating houses of luxury where can be seen at any time the admitted leaders of the world of fashion, familiar supporters of the stock markets and well known millinery stands who carry dressmakers' creations into the view of a gaping world as sandwich men carry boards which announce the latest sensational novelty."

SCHOOL CHILDREN MUST BE FED. English Teachers Must Refer Hungry Pupils to Overseers of the Poor.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. LONDON, April 29.-After an investigation of the question of the presence in lementary schools of large numbers of children who on account of being underfed are unable to derive proper benefits from the instructions, the local government board has issued an order dealing therewith in the spirit of truly paternal government.

The order instructs managers and teachers who find children coming to school inadequately fed immediately to notify the overseers of the poor, who will at once supply the requisite relief. This must never be in the form of money, but the actual food needed. An interesting feature of the order is the fact that complete discretion is vested in the overseers as to whether the relief shall be given as a loan or as poor relief in the ordinary sense. In either father will be informed and will have an opportunity to make the necessary provision himself. If he fails to do thispand in the opinion of the overseers it is a case of neglect, their relief will be regarded as a compulsory an which they will be able to recover in a county court. If, however, the parent is considered a bona fide poor person unable to bear the expense, the burden will fall on the rates, the parent not being disfranchised as is ordinarily the case on receipt of parish relief. The relief is not continued more than a month on a single application. The Local Government Board suggests that if a second application be made on account of the same child within six months the overseers shall consider whether it is their duty to proceed against the father under the Vagcancy act or the Prevention of Cruelty to Children act

GLASGOW DRY, BUT NOT SOBER. Corner The Thirsty Went to Nearby Towns and

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. LONDON, April 29.-The Chancellor of the Exchequer, alluding in his budget speech to the fact that there was a decrease in the revenue from the taxes on spirits, declared his belief that this was due to increased sobriety rather than for any temporary reasons. The municipal authorities of Glasgow, who were prematurely convinced of the reformation of its citizens, closed all the icensed public houses on Easter Monday, which was a bank holiday. The result was that the day passed in a most gratifying atmosphere of good behavior, but neighboring towns within easy access by road and rail tell a different tale. Thirty thousand inhabitants of the great city poured into Paisley, Canbuslang and other quarters all day in a roaring flood, animated by the one purpose of finding and consuming whisky. The story of the day at Paisley is that of other places of refuge. By 3 o'clock in the afternoon not a drop of whisky was left in all Paisley, and multitudes were still left with thirsts unquenched. The local police stations were soon packed full of persons who were unable to take care of themselves, and the police could do nothing with the prisoners but place them in tram cars to be returned to Glasgow, whose civic virtue, in the words of a commentator, seems to have worked out in making a desert and calling it sobriety.

About ten days ago, so the story goes one of the younger members of the club and an intimate friend were seated quietly in one of the rooms in which ladies are permitted to entertain their men friends at tea. In the blissful belief that they were the sole occupants of the room, the young man broached a question to which he received a satisfactory reply.

In his joy, heedless of the fact that he was sitting in the sacred precincts of the Lyceum Club for ladies, the young man imprinted upon the cheek of his fiancé a discreet yet rapturous kiss. He was startled by a sound, and an observing, though unobserved, woman, severe and dignified. at Vienna, the Duke d'Avarna, and the and no longer young, swept out of the room, casting as she passed a withering glance at the lovers.

It was originally stated that this woman informed the committee of the affair, with the result that the younger woman was requested to resign; but one paper which alluded to the story has been informed that the member indicated was not asked to resign, nor has the matter been before the committee.
